

Santa Fe Home Blends Styles For A Certain Southwest Sophistication

A brick pathway and actions carefully increase to the glass-paned front door.

Barker Realty

Pueblo, Spanish and modern designs integrate to accomplish a cohesive mix at this flat-roofed house in Santa Fe, New Mexico.

Built in 1963 and set on a roomy 2.35 acres, the two-story home has actually been recently equipped with high-end, amusing and multi-generational living in mind.

The entry is topped with a risen wood ceiling consisting of skylights.

Barker Realty

Mature trees and a curving driveway soften the stucco façade at the method to your home. A landscaping lined brick sidewalk and actions carefully increase to the double eight-pane wood front door.

Wood and terracotta tile floorings, several fireplaces and wood-beam ceilings are amongst the interior information.

The deck off the living-room takes in views to the remote hills.

Barker Realty

The living-room opens to a deck that takes in green belt, hillside and treetop views. Walls of glass bring light into the dining-room, which opens to a walled al fresco dining area with a fireplace.

The center island cooking area includes granite counter tops, a double oven, a red wine cooler and stainless-steel home appliances. A breakfast location sits to one side.

A long center island offers cooking area and seating in the cooking area.

Barker Realty

Vaulted beamed ceilings bring into the main suite, which has a walk-in closet, double sinks and opens to walled patio area area.

The light-filled lower level has a living location, a 2nd kitchen area with a red wine fridge, 2 visitor bed rooms and a restroom. There are an overall of 4 bed rooms and 4 restrooms within your house's almost 6,000 square feet of living area.

Vaulted beamed ceilings continue through the upper level spaces.

Barker Realty

Recent enhancements consist of the landscaped watering system, timed sidewalk lights and brand-new windows. The house has a heated three-car garage.

Aviva Schear of Barker Realty is the listing representative for 1031 Governor Dempsey Drive, Santa Fe, New Mexico. The asking cost is United States $3.2 million.

Matures trees and shrubs surround your house.

Barker Realty

The street takes its name from John J. Dempsey, the Santa Fe citizen who was the 13th gov of New Mexico and a member of the U.S. House of Representatives.

The home is just 2 miles from Santa Fe's Historic Plaza, a pedestrian-friendly location with winding streets lined with art galleries, shops and dining establishments. Other regional destinations consist of a historical train, centuries-old churches and petroglyph-filled ruins.

Albuquerque International Sunport has to do with an hour to the southwest of Santa Fe.

Barker Realty is an establishing member of Forbes Global Properties, a customer market and subscription network of elite brokerages offering the world's most elegant houses.

Follow me on Twitter or LinkedIn.

Source: Santa Fe Home Blends Styles For A Certain Southwest Sophistication